"Leaving any moral consideration out of the question, do you believe that Mr. Hummel world risk a practice he had spent a lifetime building up by making an afflaavit that Dodge had not been served and that Dodge had not been served and that Dodge had not authorized Ruger to appear, if Dodge had told him to the contrary? A lawyer whe would do that would not be a candidate for a lunatic asylum.

"Dodge butted in to get money anyhow. He is a hungry and avaricious wolf with ro conscience, whatever. In his ignorant cupidity he imagined his scheme of perjury would go through, but no lawyer of intelligence would ever imagine it for a minute.
"Can you conceive of a man with Mr.
Hummel's practice and reputation exploiting a scheme of perjury for a paitry—to him—$5,000? That is all he got from Capt. Morse for his fee. He had given $6,000 to Dodge, and other expenses were fully $1,000 more."
Mr. Nicoll argued that Dodge was and it lacked the slightest corroboration.

"You cannot regard the refusal of Cohen and Kaffenburgh to answer questions as corroboration of Dodge's testimony in any sense," said Mr.
Nicoll. "And I call your attention to the fact that Capt. Morse testified Mr.
Hummel told him Dodge was an innocast man and that he was willing to stand by him."

How About Morses?

"Why," demanded hir. Nicoli, in closing, "should all the vengeance of the law be visited upon little Abe Hummel? Where do the rich and powerful millionaires, C. W. Morse, of New York, and James T. Morse, of Boston, come is in this case?

"They are the principals, gentlemen, if there are principals. Hummel simply ected in the capacity of one doing work for them."

After recess Mr. Rand began summing up, saying he would speak for about an hour.

January 1.

Mr. Rand was in excellent form. As he progressed in his argument the little defendant shrunk down into the satin lining of his overcost as though he were cold. The prosecutor did not fear him. He went at Hummel's firm and at Hummel without gloves. He challenged counsel for the defence to protest against any misstatement of facts or law he might make.

Mr. Nicoll followed the evidence step by step through all the twists and turns of the alleged conspiracy. He charged Dodge with seeking to put the onus of the offense upon the defendant in order to save himself from punishment for perjury.

"Mr. Hummel did not seek this case," said Mr. Nicoll. "Out of all the thousands of lawyers in the city of New York Capt. Morse chose to select Mr. Hummel because of Mr. Hummel's familiarity with the divorce laws. He scushi out Mr. Hummel and told him of the unhappiness brought upon the cindian of his naphew by his marriage to the divorced Mrs. Dedge.

"I am not here to generally condemn this absent weenan who has not shown her face in this court. It is distasteful to me to speak disparagingly of any woman.
